

Hexham and the surrounding area of west Northumberland has a rich and varied history. Members of Hexham Local History Society enjoy exploring that history, from earliest prehistory to the recent past

There are always new opportunities to find out more about the area and to understand it better. This is always more to be found out about the history around us; the heritage of Tynedale, of Northumbria or of a wider world.

Members

- Enjoy a programme of 8 monthly talks by visiting speakers or fellow members who share their knowledge or expertise on a variety of subjects. These meetings also offer the opportunity to exchange information, ideas and chat with friendly, like-minded people.
- During the summer months, have a chance to attend 3 visits to some of the historic places throughout the north of England and the Scottish Borders.
- Read about local history in the Society's annual journal, the Hexham Historian, and the thrice-yearly Newsletter.
- Enjoy discounts of all the Society's series of Occasional Publications.
- Enjoy a website packed full of useful and interesting information about the Society and Hexham's history, including a Members' Library section, to which members have exclusive access.
- Engage in individual or collective research projects on local people, places or events. The Society maintains a vibrant Notes & Queries page on its website and a Facebook page, to which members are encouraged to contribute. Members are welcome to present their completed research as talks or articles for publication in the Hexham Historian.
- Participate in external events such as local history fairs.

The Society helps with its knowledge and expertise in many public and private activities. It is often asked to advise on local historical discoveries and to answer queries from individuals, local planning authorities, community groups and council officers.
